Spam, Spam, Spam, Spam, Spam, Spam, Spam, Spam, Spammetty Spammmmmm! Spammetty Spam.

To subscribe to the ld listserver, send a message -- the single word, Subscribe, in both the body and subject of your message -- to this address and watch the fun begin. If you find this too overwhelming, you can subscribe to a digest version of LD-L (the same word, subscribe, does the trick) that sends only one or two collections of messages a day that still make for interesting reading.

Someone -- maybe you, maybe someone pretending to be you, maybe your from an alternate universe, maybe your evil twin, maybe my evil twin --has signed you up for the Lincoln-Douglas listserver. Henceforth you will get more e-mail than you'll ever be able to handle.

Sorry about that.

To unsubscribe, send e-mail to ld-l-request@world.std.com with the single word message:

unsubscribe

Of course, the likelihood that you will save this message and be able to get out of this listserver alive is slim at best.

Have fun.

Re: New Topic

I am holding in my hand the most recent issue of Rostrum, so fresh off the presses that the ink is still dripping onto the floor. The November-December topic is

Resolved: Animal testing is immoral

Ring any bells? But this time it's true, and they really mean it.

Re: RE Individual Rights

Yule says:

<<According to page 492 (or it might have been page 942, one or the other) of Rawls, individual rites are derived from basic humanity. But on page 233 of Nozick (or it might have been page 332, one or the other), Nozick proves beyond a doubt that Rawls is a wiener.>>

Yule has a point here, but I'm not sure what it is. You either have to agree with Rawls or with Nozick, or both, or neither. But claiming that either one of them is willing to posit an ad hominem argument is, well, basically immoral. And I though we were talking about rights. What do rites have to do with it?

Could someone please backchannel me info on any upcoming Micronesian, Macronesian or Polynesian tournaments?

Thanks.

Re: RE NEW TOPIC

This time Rob is mistaken. The NFL has thrown out the animal-testing resolution completely, and has no intention of reinstating it. Additionally, it is impossible for Mr. Frederickson to have received next month's Rostrum yet, because it hasn't even been printed.

These sort of hoaxes just aren't funny anymore.

<<Fritz>>

I thought we had finished with this argument. If you'll remember what I said on 7/24 (or it might have been 4/27, one or the other), rights are either inalienable or unalienable, depending on the age of your dictionary.

Let's can this thread while we can. Allrite?

I am disturbed that Professor Buroughs disbelieves that I am sitting here with the wet Rostrum dripping onto my lap. My wife would substantiate the statement, if she were only here to verify it.

Re: Cosa Nostrum

The latest episode (#32,487) of the only high school debate soap opera that is salt-free and fat-reduced is now available at

Http://www.cosanostrum.com/index.html

We almost didn't make it this week. The Catamite is in a state of permanent depression over the recent discovery that Grover Cleveland is the bread on a Benjamin Harrison sandwich, which is the best rebuttal the Americans have vs. the double-Cromwell Charlesburger on James. We should re-elect Jimmy Carter while we still can (besides, he can do repair work on the White House), and get a Reagan-Clinton with a side of Bush.
